

Total revenue received from all sources outside Canada by Canadian Registered Charities in 2015

By Mark Blumberg (June 11, 2017)

The charity world is increasingly international in scope. Although we often focus on how Canadian charities conduct foreign activities abroad, there is another important story. In 2010, Canadian charities received approximately $831 million from sources outside of Canada. Based on 2015 T3010 data, this number has increased to approximately $1,908,965,463.00.

Therefore, over $1.9 billion was received by Canadian registered charities from outside of Canada in their 2015 fiscal year.

Although the number is larger than I would have thought it is not surprising. Canada is an excellent place to conduct charitable activities, both internally and internationally. And, with the Canadian dollar currently being quite weak, we can expect that the amount will grow as Canadian institutions can in some cases conduct charitable activities at lower costs than comparable U.S., UK and other institutions. As well much of the Canadian funding received for example from US sources will be in US dollars so with the foreign exchange difference some foreign contributors with multi-year commitments will be giving larger amounts in Canadian dollars.

As an aside there is too much complaining about "foreign influence" in Canadian affairs and as you can see very little of the funds are going to "radical environmental organizations" or right-wing think tanks, but they are also on the list. For some very large and reputable organizations the foreign funds are a very large proportion of their budget – they are also not generally Canadian taxpayer subsidized.

From a fundraising perspective, this exemplifies the importance of fundraisers not only focussing on the usual Canadian donors but also on foreign sources of revenue whether it be from governments, foundations, individual or corporations. We have assisted a number of charities in strategizing about foreign sources of revenue and putting systems in place to maximize their earning potential.

Below is a chart that contains a list of registered charities that received funds from sources outside of Canada in 2015. It is broken down into tax-receipted sources and non-tax receipted sources. We have also combined both tax receipted and non-tax receipted for “Combined Revenue from all sources outside of Canada”. Finally, we have placed the registered charity’s total revenue in the last column to provide a perspective on the size of foreign income compared to total income.
